A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE HARMONICA

Traditionally, the history of the harmonica was believed to begin around 1100 B.C. with the sheng, a Chinese instrument consisting of a bundle of bamboo tubes attached to a curving pipe. The instrument contains a free reed, a strip of flexible metal that flaps up and down when a player blows through the sheng's holes, thus creating musical tones. But most present-day historians are of a different opinion. 3.1. _____ In 1780, he used the free reed to create a device meant to imitate human speech. His aim was to better understand the mechanics of voice. He called his invention, which was the size of an upright piano, a “talking machine.”

Over the next century, more musically minded inventors reduced the size of his device, calling their various creations a terpodian or harmonium. The pocket-size “mouth organ” arrived in the 1820s and would spread throughout Europe, followed by the United States. One man who profited was the German instrument maker Matthias Hohner, who formed his namesake company in 1857. 3.2. _____ The company remains the leading harmonica brand to this day.

According to Kim Field's Harmonicas, Harps and Heavy Breathers: The Evolution of the People's Instrument, “the golden age of the mouth organ” came between the world wars.

3.3. _____ In 1944, a former Marine from Chicago, Jerry Murad, formed a trio of harmonizing harmonica players in dinner jackets and ties, called the Harmonicats. Not long after, Sonny Boy Williamson II and Little Walter were pioneering a wow-wow-wow technique, the heart of the Chicago blues. 3.4. _____ If you are a careful listener, you will trace them in dozens of songs – from Bob Dylan to Stevie Wonder and John Popper of Blues Traveler.

Hohner and other brands were hit hard during the pandemic. 3.5. _____ You may wonder why. The answer is simple: It is intuitive, it is easy and it is cheap.

BEING AN ACCESSORIES DESIGNER, BY EUGENIA KIM

My father was a doctor, so naturally, I thought my calling was to be a doctor too. But during my first semester of pre-med, while sledding on a cafeteria tray with friends, I fell off a 10-foot drop and broke my back. I was in a hospital for a month. Being unable to move and surrounded by sick people was depressing. It made me not want to work in hospitals.

I minored in creative writing, and the summer after graduation I started to work at Allure beauty magazine. They paid for employees to take classes in anything relevant work-wise, so I took a hat design class. I liked the fact that hats could be made quickly – in one sitting period – and by hand, instead of on a machine.

One night, I thought it would be a good idea to cut my own hair, but it ended up very crooked, so I shaved my head. I then started making hats resembling hair, and feathered ones too, to feel more feminine. What happened next is very '90s, because this wouldn't happen today. I was shopping in SoHo, and employees at two stores commented on my hat and asked to see my collection. Nowadays, you need to have thousands of followers on social media to even get noticed as a designer! I didn't know how to create a collection, so I just made the same hat in different colors. One store, Bond07, bought my whole "collection" and created an entire window display of my hats. Then, someone from Barneys saw my collection in Bond07's window. I got an appointment with them. It went well and the buyer said she really liked the collection; she didn't say they were definitely placing an order, just alluded to it. But I was naive and told the Times that my collection would be available at Barneys. Right after the article came out, the Barneys buyer called me and said, "You need to get your hats into our store ASAP." Maybe they were planning on ordering, maybe they weren't, but that's how I got my first big order.

I didn't know how to run a business. I delivered smaller orders to boutiques by bike. I didn't know how to read a shipping manual when sending Barneys my order, so I packed one hat per box in 18 massive boxes and I rented a limo to deliver the collection.

I lived then with three girls in a loft and tried to pretend I wasn't running a hat business from the apartment. My roommates complained about finding feathers everywhere: in the rice cooker, in the toilet. The landlord didn't let us renew our lease after a year because of my "suspicious paint lines" on the walls, which I drew to create the hats. So I found a live-work storefront on East 4th Street and my store opened.

I wish I could say I had a strategy, but I was just really motivated and opportunities came by me, mainly thanks to a lot of chutzpah and a very open mind. My business was lean and grew slowly. One day, Jennifer Lopez's stylist, Andrea Lieberman, just walked by my store and came in. I designed some big, floppy hats with gold chain detail for Jennifer. Soon I got dubbed the celebrity milliner in the media – even though I only had a few celebrity clients. I started getting requests from other celebrities' stylists. One season, I was busy with fashion shows and Andrea Lieberman wanted a big band hat for a Gwen Stefani video. It didn't seem worth it, so I turned it down, but the video ended up being her huge hit "Hollaback Girl." That's one of my regrets in life. A few years ago, we did a sassy sunhat with "Do Not Disturb" on the brim; it's our bestselling hat ever, and a viral Instagram hit. I scrambled to fill huge reorders. We also launched straw handbags. They were a natural extension, since we do straw hats. Our most successful bag, the Flavia, resembles an upside-down straw hat.

I'm like the triangle player in the orchestra of fashion. Being a designer of high-end hats is very niche, but I've grown steadily, and the brand's evolved. I learn every year – every day, really – and that's why I love my job.
